Randy says...

Q: What did one snowman say to the other?

A: Have you seen the size of Charlie's Carrot? With a carrot like that, he should be able to sniff out a great deal for us in this economy!

Hey...open your coal and talk to me!!!

Test your knowledge...

1. What five basic components of a "smart home" can be controlled by technology?
2. Fewer than 2 percent of homeowners build what type of home?
3. Who is "Fannie Mae" and why is she a big name in real estate?

Tip of the month . . .

You noticed a lot for sale in a suburban area in town that looks like a perfect place to build your dream home. Buying undeveloped land can provide an opportunity to build a house that will meet your needs, but you will need certain information before you sign on the dotted line. Most suburban areas have zoning regulations which govern the type of structure that can be erected, the dimensions, and even the material used on the exterior. Historic preservation groups work with builders in many areas to ensure that any new construction fits in with the existing buildings. If you want to build out of the city limits, check the availability of public utility services and the cost of bringing those services to the site. Local planning and zoning boards can provide you with information about proposed development that could change your quiet country lane into a busy street.
