

Welcome to Knoxville

Greetings! I hope you find this relocation information package useful in your consideration of Knoxville as your new home. We are happy to serve you! Jim and Christy are both native Knoxvilleians, having graduated from the University of Tennessee.

Jim has been appointed as the 2016 Chairperson for the Professional Standards Committee of the Knoxville Area Association of Realtors.

Knox County is located in the Eastern portion of Tennessee and contains Knoxville, the third largest city in Tennessee. Knoxville is also home to the University of Tennessee aka The Volunteers. Knox County has a population of approximately 450,000 people (2015). Below is a chart of age distribution from the 2010 census.

Knox County is home to a wide array of industry, including large employers in defense, education, health care/hospitalization, transportation, and automotive OEM. Many corporations have chosen Knox County for their corporate headquarters.

Knox County is situated along major Interstates 40 and 75, which merge just West of Knox County. Much of our development has been along these interstates. Parts of Knox County are bounded to the South by the Tennessee River and to the North by the Clinch River.

We enjoy a number of attractions, local lakes and mountains, and have a great number of bike trails, both on and off road. Knoxville is an easy day trip from historic Abingdon, VA, Asheville, NC, and Atlanta, GA.
